With that technique, the arc will be better established with less bounce and, 1. Overlapping electrodes may be used, but the arc should not be in any way obstructed. When multiple electrodes are used, it is advisable to place the electrodes as far apart as possible to minimize thermal stresses in the weld pool and in the base metal. When using multiple electrodes, and when the base metal is on more than one side of the work, care should be taken to avoid the use of aluminum electrodes on base metal that is combustible. 2. An attempt should be made to utilize as many different arc lengths as possible.
